NSIC applies the tenders on behalf of single MSE/Consortia of MSEs for securing orders for them. These orders are then distributed amongst MSEs in tune with their production capacity.

Single point Registration for Government Purchase

Gangamai College of Engineering is organizing One day Workshop on the topic "COPYRIGHT & PATENT" on 12/07/2018. The Resource Person was Dr.K.M.Joshi (Department of Applied Science) and the total Teaching & non teaching staff of GCoE, Nagaon. A patent gives you the right to stop others from copying, manufacturing, selling or importing your invention without your permission. See protecting intellectual property. You get protection for a pre-determined period, allowing you to keep competitors at bay. You can then use your invention yourself. Alternatively, you can license your patent for others to use it or you can sell it. This can provide an important source of revenue for your business. Indeed, some businesses exist solely to collect the royalties from a patent they have licensed - perhaps in combination with a registered design and trade mark. Innovation is a new solution to a technological problem that can be protected by licences or patents. Patent secures the interests of innovators whose tools or ideas are genuinely noteworthy and financially fruitful, by guaranteeing that a founder or creator can control the business utilization of their idea. An individual or organization that holds a patent over innovation has the privilege to keep others from manufacturing, trading, retailing, or stealing that innovation. This provides opportunities for creators to sell, exchange, or accredit their licensed ideas to others who may wish to use them.

Copyright refers to the legal right of the owner of intellectual property. In simpler terms, copyright is the right to copy. This means that the original creators of products and anyone they give authorization to are the only ones with the exclusive right to reproduce the work. Copyright law gives creators of original material the exclusive right to further use and duplicate that material for a given amount of time, at which point the copyrighted item becomes public domain. Copyright is a legal term describing ownership of control of the rights to the use and distribution of certain works of creative expression, including books, video, motion pictures, musical compositions and computer programs. Historically, copyright law has been enacted to balance the desire of cultures to use and reuse creative works -- thus creating "derivative work" - against the rights of authors of art, literature, music and the like to monetize their work by controlling who can make and sell copies of the work. To strike this balance, the exclusivity of control is almost always restricted to a set period of years, after which a copyright-protected work reverts to the public domain and may be freely used.
